

Just at present, the facts go terribly against them. The rebels seem just as unwilling as ever to alter the Constitution. They seem resolved "I confess that we—I mean the loyalists of South—have committed a political blunder. We foolishly thought that we were right in sustain-the B. not deceived by party ties. Therefore back to the true principles of justice for all-rights for all men. Away with the idea that

Our extracts from Gen. Butler's speech come from the version better than the Tribune's. This is not quite a just one, either of the New York

Not less has the following from an A

[illegible]

